

BEYOND ALL RIGHTS AND LEFTS: TOWARDS UPWARD REVOLTS

Written by Conor Wrigley

“Alas! Even Julius Evola didn't know it: After Revolt against the modern world — Revolt against the modern traditionalism and the modern world always begins... simultaneously! It is the very first axiom of The Shunya Revolution and the very last Over-axiom of The Absolute Revolution. Only the Revolution from within! Only Spiritual Revolt of All! Only the Absolute Spiritual Revolution!”

— Azsacra Zarathustra, Revolt Against the Modern Traditionalism

The faction politics that operate on the left versus right spectrum have failed. This has been proven time and time again throughout history and even more so in the advent of worldwide democracy. The left and the right, while maintaining the appearance of difference, both have proven that they are simply the same thing using different rhetoric. Even the so called

Far Right and the Far Left have points in which they agree as well as maintaining similar tactics which have failed them for years in this era. I could even go so far as to say that the so called new Right, which not having much say in any present system of governance, would end in ultimate decline as it is inevitably doing battle with the rising spirit of something further than man. In this article I will accomplish two things; first give a criticism to politics of the left and the right and second describe my own view on accomplishing true revolution, namely, a revolt of the spirit.

Politics within a spectrum of left versus right or within a left/right paradigm are simply a grand illusion. An illusion that is meant to give the voters the idea that they have made a significant change by means of vote; this vote being they're so called "voice" in government. Any citizen with a shred of intelligence will tell you that it is quite the opposite and the elected leaders, chosen by the people in theory, act far from what the people have chosen them to do. Most will also tell you of the problem with both the right and the left, though the vast majority continue to go along with them, as they have proven that they are both heads attached to the same body or perhaps two weeds attached to the same root would be a better way of saying it. Yes, the whole left and right perspective is ultimately a grand illusion that has kept people trapped within the confines of a governmental system; a system that inevitably does great battle with the rising spirit as to keep it within a jurisdiction of the state's own control. This illusion also causes you to fall into the illusion of an "us versus them" mentality which can blind you from engaging in a great battle outside of the material.

Politics of the right and the left can also be seen as a great trap, a trap that holds down the spirit with the use of political propaganda. While one may have nothing but the utmost disdain or hatred for the left they might then turn to the politics of the right and thus trap themselves in the right versus left spectrum. While some might easily escape this once they have become trapped in it, others may devote total devotion or allegiance to the right wing cause and thus distract themselves from any metaphysical or spiritual advancement. Right wing and left wing politics focus entirely on the material, at least and especially in modern times, and even if they give lip service to the realm of the spiritual or metaphysical it is just mere words and political propaganda which is only given to attempt to gain some sort of support within that group of people. Yes, this is to say that they care not about any kind of true advancement or revolution but only their own gains for material reasons i.e. control of the state. It must be pointed out here; however, that sometimes spiritual movements or groups and individuals dedicated to a true revolt of the spirit must mask themselves in political language in order to secure a base; however, this is extremely dangerous as it can quickly devolve into another political group of suit and tie talking heads.

Movements for the revolt of the spirit, once doing a mask of the political, will mostly fail and this is not hard to understand. A key problem with engaging in this type of action, assuming one wins power, will inevitably have to create a top down system of governance. This top down system of governance will be the cause of its own inevitable downfall. Why? Because there was no true internal revolt within the mass that either supports it or are its subjects. As I have talked earlier about Azsacra Zarathustra's revolutionary concepts of Shunyarevolution and Absolute Revolution, the revolt must begin internally and once passed through that point it must force itself into the outside world. A system such as the one being described that has taken on a mask of political rhetoric and propaganda will ultimately fail because it has not done this and can't do this. It can of course influence it for a few people but ultimately will still fall on a left versus right spectrum and a coded language that only few might understand. Thus has been the case for spiritual movements masked as political movements in the modern era.

In recent times even the new Right seems to have done this. They have taken up a fight against modernity, which needs to be done, and have claimed they are to be the alternative answer to the mainstream right wing and the only one that can stop the left wing. While the term new Right is simply something that has been given to various individuals, groups, and organization through media and elsewhere; they still fall under the use of political means to accomplish their goals. While some of the groups that fall under this umbrella term may be more concerned with the spirits upwards rise than others they still fall under the same political rhetoric or goals within the realm of the illusory political world.

It can also be said that all systems will inevitably crumble, even the most ideologically pure. A left wing or right wing group, or new Right for that matter, may set up its system and keep it ideologically pure for ages yet the inevitable cycle of life and death and the decaying touch of death will cause it to crumble. That is to say that yes, it is true that all empires fall. What doesn't change is the man's ability to rise above the ruins or ride the tiger down the hill as the civilization rots from within and finally a phoenix can be reborn. It is not the system or the ideology that is the ultimate end but what is within the man himself. The man can become Overman by stepping out of the system, by making his sheer existence a revolt against the world of illusions and destroying them one after another. By turning his existence towards revolt he might also make himself a great hero or like a legend of old combating whatever great illusion comes his way. This echoes the revolutionary philosophy of Azsacra Zarathustra who says that the state is but a leg for the Overman.

The ultimate issue which is the cause of the downfall of any system of governance whether enacted by the right, the left, even the New Right or Old right is, as I have said earlier, the fact that they are working from a top down perspective. This means that they wish to institute a new system to replace the current system from their own means and not engage in a revolution from within, that is to cause a revolution from within. As I have discussed earlier, in order for a revolution to be successful it must contain elements of the spiritual and going further it must happen starting on an internal level, from within oneself, and then be pushed outward into the realm of "reality" or the material. Thus a revolution instigated by any of the various wings, whether right or left, will simple be yet another illusion of change. This illusion of change, once it occurs, may last longer than previous systems but it will still fall as a victim of its own creation.

If politics of the left and the right have failed and should no longer be considered plausible alternatives and completely disregarded, is there any answer at all? Yes! Loudly Yes! There is indeed an answer and that answer lies within the self! In order to truly liberate one's self from the damned spirit of gravity and systems of illusion one must seek the answers within and spark an internal revolution of the spirit! One must do great battle with the illusions placed upon oneself that have made their way into their internal worldview, into their very thoughts. One must do great battle with the fears that have been instilled in order to overcome them and kill off any and all fear! This is the great answer to the top down “revolutions” of many of the so called alternative groups that exist today such as the far left “revolutionaries” and even the European and North American new Right.

In order for a true revolution to occur one must retract from the world of political illusion, that is to say that one must go beyond and contrary to all political rules. This would be to turn the whole damned world of the physical and material into a great forest that is to become a playground for the true revolutionary man. This is to say that the man can create the absolute risk necessary for the attainment of Overman and finally Over without a man! By retracting one’s self from the lies and political propaganda of the suit wearing fools of the past one looks towards the great Overman of the future! By removing the political limitations of a tame existence you then can engage in the dangerous risk of freedom and the destruction of the great illusion perpetuated by all systems and by the world itself!

It is the great struggle of a new hero, a first Overman, to take on fight with the systems of illusion. A great hero and Overman cannot be found within the dogmatic politics of liberalism, conservatism or even a new Right but can only be found existing in a world beyond their realm. This isn’t to say that they will be found in some metaphysical alternate reality, of course not! They will be found within the same world of the material yet act as if they are the ultimate controls of that realm. They will be outside of the political illusions instituted by policy and rhetoric of political talking heads! The man dedicated to true spirit revolt turns away from the filth of perpetuated illusion. Indeed, the true way of revolting against the modern world is not to replace the modern world’s systems with one of your own desire but to look deep within oneself and cast of all illusions! Once this occurs the great battle against the leviathan and the parasitic nature of this world can commence with the power of great lightning discovered along the way.

A great Overman or sacred Yes Sayer will realize that politics ultimately do not matter in the spirits rise upwards. This great Overman has moved beyond that and realized that he is free regardless of what system is placed upon. He will act according to his own will and not that which the state or society dictate to him. It is this great realization that a revolt of spirit can occur and through this realization the untimely and inevitable downfall of the illusion will begin. By turning life into a great revolt and making ones very own existence an ultimate revolt against more than modernity but the illusions themselves the spirit can only rise! It is through this that the great chains of the damned spirit of gravity can be broken and defeated! It is never through the replacement of one system with another that can bring about this great destruction.

It is not through the broken ways of the past that we march forward into a new realm beyond the mere physical. Through Azsacra’s philosophical concepts such as TDAS: Theory of the Destruction of All Systems we learn that the great danger, the absolute risk, and its revolt is aimed toward all bounds placed upon the spirit. We learn that the Overman and the state are entirely incompatible as the Overman cannot accept the limitations placed by the so called “laws” of the state. Through the destruction of all systems and engaging in battles of creative destruction one partakes in a great philosophy of pure action and it is through this that the Over without Man can be achieved. A sacred holy Yes to Life is to be shouted and the battle against the great illusions of this world can commence. It is through the Absolute Risk of this pure action, of this risky and dangerous freedom, that the spirit continuously rises through each spoke of the wheel and into the pure over itself; beyond all forms. In order for this to occur one must ignore the political rhetoric and propaganda of the left, right, conservative, liberal, even new Right and engage in a great war within the self. By winning great victory within the self one moves onto the greater battle against illusion.

The true revolutionary of the future, the sacred Yes Sayer, will not turn to the old polluted politics of dogmatic politicians and so called “theorists” but will turn inward and seek the answers within the self. The future revolutionary will move against all politics for his prize does not lay in this realm but something beyond that. It is not the victory of control that he is looking forward but something beyond all material. His spirit longs its own liberation and the protection of a sum of all lives at once not a simple victory over control of his people, folk, and other spirits through political means. It is necessary to forget about any sort of nostalgia for old systems even if not given a proper chance to exist. It is necessary to liberate one’s self from one’s own illusions and then move further to liberate one’s self from all illusion.

We have moved beyond the right and the left, conservatism and liberalism, even the new Right itself. We have moved to a battlefield for great heroes, great legends, and perhaps even gods themselves to be born and made. The true path is not one limited to the political but beyond that. The future of revolutions will be decided by the spirit and its inevitable rise upward with the momentum and ferocity of lightning. Only a great Overman who has cast off the chains can fight off this world of material illusion and further only a great Overman can cast off the vessel of man and become Over without a Man. Never rely on the old broken ways of the pure political nonsense, only rely on the power of absolute spirit revolt! You are left with a choice, you can either continue to listen to monkeys in suits blabbering on with their political rhetoric and propaganda or you can live as a wolf amongst eagles and dismantle their lies. The internal revolution will always lead to a greater external one, rise above!
